Transnational practices: Diversities in a globalized world

7,5 credits

Diversity is one of the significant features of the transnational and translocational ties and practices. The multiple and intersecting axes of diversities in regards to economy, politic, culture, subjectivities, psychic and different empirical contexts construct and condition people's experiences of displacements.

By focusing on conditions of “leaving”, “arrival”, and “living”, in regards to class, gender, race, religion, and family relations this course aims to shed light on interrelated concepts that are relevant to understand an increasingly globalized world and contemporary diverse societies

Cultural Heritage and Politics of Memory - Europe in the 20th Century

The course provides knowledge about how environments and remnants of 20th century Sweden and Europe today are re-interpreted and used for new purposes.

Three areas in which different aspects of a contemporary interest in the past are in focus. The first area concerns industrial heritage, the second involves problematic heritages (e.g. the Cold War) and the third relates to different forms of nostalgia.

The teaching critically discusses our time's use of the past. The teaching methods integrate reading, exercises, study visits and discussions.
