Modern sociological theory, 7,5 hp
for doctoral students
Course plan, spring 2024

Course code
SO1FU33

Content

The aim of this course is to give an overview of modern sociological theory and a deeper understanding of some modern sociological perspectives. "Modern sociological theory" refers to the period after the decline of functionalism around 1960 and until today. This course covers some of the important fields and perspectives in recent sociology, including e.g. cultural theory, rational choice, structural analysis and organizational theory.

Learning outcomes

After accomplishing this course, participants are expected to:

In terms of knowledge and understanding:

- Have knowledge about the principal lines in the development of modern sociological theory.
- Understand the meaning of central concepts and theories in modern sociological theory.
- Be able to identify important similarities and differences between modern sociological theories.
- Know how modern sociology has been shaped by classical sociology.

In terms of accomplishment and competence:

- Be able to account for, and to analyze, the content of central texts by modern sociologists in a clear, well put and well-argued manner.
- Be able to use relevant parts of modern sociological theory to analyze social phenomena.

In terms of values and evaluation:

- To be able to critically assess modern sociological theories in terms of their merits and limitations.

Instruction

The course is provided at half-time basis over 10 weeks, from January 15 to March 15 2023. Participants meet about once a week during 9 weeks.

The instructor will give a lecture the first class, but the remaining classes will primarily center on student presentations and discussions. During these classes, there will be presentations of the course readings by a group of students, discussion of the course readings based on questions, and presentations of answers to discussion questions.

The classes depend on active student participation and all students are therefore expected to have read the required literature before each class and actively engage in discussion. Keep required literature for each class close at hand during classes.

The organization of groups and tasks will be assigned by the instructor during the first class. In order to arrange this, attendance at the first class is crucial. If a student plans to take the course, but is unable to attend the first class, an e-mail must be sent to the head instructor before 8 am on Tuesday 16 January in order to be included in one of the groups.

Attendance is required for all classes. Absence must be compensated by assignments. If the first class is missed, the student must provide a short summary (2-300 words) of Abend's article. If any of the later classes (2-9) is missed, the student must submit short summaries (200-300 words) of each of the articles/chapters for the missed class. All supplementary assignments should be submitted together with the course paper by March 15 17:00. A student who misses more than three classes will not be graded.

If the paper and supplementary assignments are not handed in on time, there is an opportunity to hand in by 15 October or at the deadline for the paper when the course is given next time.

Examination

To pass, students are required to participate actively during discussions and present a theoretical application for one class together with their group. Examination is in the form of two assignments: an individual course paper and an oral presentation (group).

Course paper

The student is expected to write a short paper, including a reflection of how the course contributes to the development of the student's sociological thinking. The length should be 3500-4500 words and formatting should be 1,5 spaced, Times New Roman 12 point. Deadline for the course paper is Friday 15 March 17:00.

The topic of the paper is free, as long as the paper discusses questions in close relation to the course contents. It is possible to address a theoretical question related to the topic of the student's master's thesis, or to start from a question discussed during a class. For example, the paper could use different theories or a few concepts to critically examine how they contribute to further understanding of a specific social phenomenon of interest, and/or compare which theory that is most suitable to address the phenomenon at hand. The paper could also take some area from one of the classes and analyze it from the perspective of another.

To pass, the paper must include discussion of at least three pieces from the required literature from at least two of the classes and of at least two of the books, in the list of suggested readings. Make explicit page references, especially for the books. The selection of books must add up to at least 600 pages, i.e. choosing to read some of the shorter books means having to read more than two. The paper must also include some kind of comparison of the literature. If the paper builds on what was presented during the group lecture or group discussion, it must be substantially developed, including a deeper analysis and argumentation. If there is a considerable overlap with the lecture, the paper will be considered as self-plagiarism. The paper should end with a reflection on the topic “how the course contributes to the development of my sociological thinking”.

Voluntary assignment to assist the decision on topic

To assist in the process of figuring out a topic for the course paper, there is an assignment about half way through the course. The deadline is Monday 19 February 17:00. This assignment should include information about the preliminary questions of the course paper, a few sentences describing the topic and selection of readings (books and pieces from required literature) that will be discussed. Please note that this is the principal opportunity to discuss the topic of the paper with the instructor.

Student lectures – guidelines and requirements

During the student lecture, the members of the group should present the course literature for the class during about 30 min.

The presentation could be structured according to the readings (e.g. one student presents some aspects of one text, another student presents aspects of another text etc.) or thematically (e.g. one student presents one or several core themes of the readings each). Present some specific theme and/or a few key concepts and/or specific comparisons across the readings. Give a substantial account of core ideas. It is also good to say something about basic questions such as assumptions, level and scope of the theory.

Please avoid reading aloud from the presented pieces and/or to summarize the content as a whole of each text.

The presentation should be approximately equally divided between all the students of the group so that each group member presents one part. It is necessary for the group to discuss together how to set up the presentation and to use PowerPoint when presenting their material.

If a student is scheduled to give a part of a lecture, but cannot attend the class in the last minute, the student should provide fellow group members with sufficient material for them to fill in the gap. The student must also provide a manuscript of his/her part of the lecture, about 700-900 words, to the course instructor. This assignment should be submitted together with the course paper by March 15 17:00.

Evaluation

The course work is graded on a scale including pass and fail. To pass, the lecture must be clear, including a sufficiently extensive review of relevant aspects and the paper must provide a clear account of the course literature, a reasonable argument and reasonable interpretations, identify some important differences and similarities in the theories or concepts discussed and include a reflection of how the course has contributed to the sociological thinking of the student.

If something is missing in a submitted assignment, it must be supplemented and resubmitted within 14 days of the result becoming available to the student.

If a student fails the course or is unable to hand in assignments on time, next time to submit the assignments is 15 October.

Schedule: Classes and reading requirements

Attendance is compulsory for all classes and all students must read the required readings before each class. The schedule is available here

Important: If a student plans to take the course, but is unable to attend the first class, an e-mail must be sent to the main instructor before 8 am on Tuesday 16 January in order to be included in one of the groups who will work together on the group assignments.
